Reflection & Learning

1. Briefly describe how you approached this project and what key insights or skills you gained through the process.

I began by getting a grasp of what the service is: it's an app for online doctor's appointments. Hyderabad was the city I decided to focus on. Lots of people there are online every day, and the majority are employed, so it seemed like a good choice.

After that I thought about who should be shown my advertising, and this is where I got a little stuck. I didn't immediately see the distinction between 'interests' and 'behaviour', they seemed much the same to me and I wasn't sure how to use each of them in a different way. However, as I continued, it all became easier to understand.

I truly understood search and display advertising when I began to build the campaigns. Search ads appear when someone is actively looking for a doctor on the internet, meaning they are already wanting this kind of service. Display ads, on the other hand, are for people browsing the web, who possibly aren't even aware of an app like this. So, search ads are for those who are ready to use the service, and display ads are to make people aware of it. Once I understood that, everything was much more obvious.

2. If you had one additional day to work on this project, what specific aspects would you improve or enhance?

I truly wish I'd had another day; I'd definitely revisit those display ads. The pictures and headlines weren't bad, but I think I could have made them a lot more grabbing. I simply ran out of time to test out lots of different ideas.

I'd also want to look at the keywords again, trying out a variety of versions to see which ones do best. What I used now just seemed about right, but I'm not certain they were the optimal selections.

In fact, choosing keywords was the thing I had the hardest time with at first. I wasn't really sure how to choose the correct ones or even what makes a keyword strong, or weak. More time would mean more playing around with them, more becoming at ease with the process, and more exploration.

3. Did you refer to any tools or platforms (e.g., AI tools, websites, YouTube tutorials)? If yes, please mention how you used them and how they supported your work.

I used several things to get this project done. Google Ads was the biggest one, I created the campaigns and got the hang of all the settings within that. I also did a standard Google search of competitor brands to see their advertising and the language they're using.

I learned mostly from YouTube videos and I rewatched my college lectures whenever I got stuck. Those were really helpful, to be honest.

Also, I used ChatGPT now and then. It wasn't for all of it, but if I needed headlines or the text for the ads themselves, I asked ChatGPT for help. I gave it keywords I was using, and details from my lectures, and it gave me lots of choices. Then I looked through all of its suggestions and chose the ones that suited the campaign. So it gave me a starting point for ideas, and I selected from those, I didn't simply copy and paste.
